

GERMAN MECHANIZED FORCES MOVE TOWARD CHANNEL, BUT IMMEDIATE PARIS THREAT APPEARS TO HAVE DIMINISHED; BELIEVE WEYGAND WILL LAUNCH MAJOR COUNTER-OFFENSIVE

Situation in Region East of Cambrai and Around Landrecies Extremely Grave to Allies, It Is Said—Germans Who Crossed Aisne River near Rethel, France, Held Back, However

(By International News Service)

PARIS, May 20—With General Maxime Weygand, new Allied Commander-in-Chief, as yet unable to consolidate the battle on the Western Front sufficiently to enable a French counter-offensive, German mechanized forces moved relentlessly toward the channel today.

While sporadic Nazi onslaughts were thrown back along the Aisne, German progress in the vicinity of Cambrai continued, but the immediate threat at Paris, so gravely directed last week, appeared to have diminished.

Official military spokesmen frankly admitted the continuance of the Nazi advance.

The impression prevalent in Paris is that the new commander-in-chief, General Weygand, would launch a major counter-offensive in a maximum effort to turn the tide.

Weygand, who succeeded General Gamelin, arrived in Paris, Saturday. Previously, he was commander of the Allied army in the Near East.

"There is no question of concealing the fact," the spokesman said, "the situation in the region east of Cambrai and around Landrecies is extremely grave."

This statement followed the issuance of a French war communique stating Allied troops succeeded in holding back German forces which crossed the Aisne River near Rethel, in France.

PARIS, May 20—The battle which may change the history of the world, reached fresh areas in northern France and Belgium today and brought death to thousands each hour.

But Paris breathed easier as it became plain that for the time being at least, the Germans have diverted their drive to the French capital, and are concentrating on reaching the channel ports.

Grimmest realists among observers here, were able to perceive two points of advantage for the Allied side today.

The German drive, although continuous, lacked the ferocious violence it had the first few days.

Second, the Allied troops are learning how to combat the Germans' unique tank plus airplane attacks. Neutral observers declared that the Germans won most of their ground by the terrifying effect of wave after wave of bombing planes, followed by mass tanks leading the infantry.

BERLIN, May 20—Further Allied retreats in France and the continuance of Nazi Germany's relentless march toward the channel ports were claimed in an official communique by the German high command today.

In Belgium, the Dendre River has been crossed, it was said, and the Escaut River reached.

(Editor's Note: This indicates that the Germans are driving toward Courtrai, where only the Lys River and

United in Marriage In St. Ann's Church

A Sunday wedding in St. Ann's R. C. Church united Miss Antonetta Comengo, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Comengo, 211 New Brook street, and Louis DiTanna, son of Mr. and Mrs. Luciano DiTanna, Burlington, N. J., the Rev. Father Peter Pini officiating. The ceremony was performed at three o'clock, the bride party entering the edifice to the strains of a wedding march played by Miss Frances Tamburella. The bride was given in marriage by her father.

Miss Mary Pinci, Brook street, and Miss Josephine Comengo, New Brook street, a sister of the bride, served as bridesmaids; while Joseph Dianni, Burlington, N. J., was best man for Mr. DiTanna, serving as usher.

The embroidered white marquisette dress worn by the bride was cut colonial style, with artificial orange blossoms appearing on either side of the V-neckline, and the bodice was shirred. The long sleeves were puffed at the shoulders, and attached to the wide waistband was a very full skirt with lengthy train. The veil of white net was attached to a seed-pearl tiara; and the bride wore white linen slippers, and carried a colonial style bouquet composed of white roses and valley lilies.

The dresses of the bridesmaids were cut similar to that of the bride, but the puffed sleeves were short, and the long, full skirts had even hem-lines. They were fashioned of ashes of roses marquisette and net. At the front of the V-necklines appeared artificial roses in the same tone. Matching hats were off-the-face models, with open crowns, and trim was of velvet ribbon in the ashes of roses shade. Slippers were of matching linen, and each carried a colonial bouquet of rose-toned roses and a variety of blue flowers.

A dinner preceded the ceremony, this being served at the Comengo residence. The reception at seven p. m., in Sons of Italy hall, was attended by a large company of relatives and friends.

Following a week's trip to New York City, Mr. and Mrs. DiTanna will reside at the home of the bride's parents.

BARTRAM'S GARDENS ARE DESCRIBED TO WOMEN

Garden Day is Observed by Bucks Co. Floral Council At Doylestown

ARRANGEMENTS JUDGED

DOYLESTOWN, May 20—Garden Day, sponsored by Bucks County Floral Council, was observed Thursday afternoon in the Doylestown high school auditorium.

Mrs. Charles Bidwell, chairman of the Garden Day committee, presided, welcoming the group to the first garden day meeting.

Mrs. Harry Shoemaker spoke of the Bucks County Dogwood Association, and said any one planting a dogwood tree becomes a life member of the association.

Mrs. Florence B. King, a member of the Lingochock Garden Club, described Bartram's Garden. She said that more than 200 years ago, in 1729, John Bartram purchased five or six acres of land along the Schuylkill River. It was sold at auction on account of delinquent taxes. He named it the "Garden of Delight." The following year he built a large stone house, the stone being Pennsylvania ledge rock. He at once began the planting of his garden, seeds and shrubs being collected from Florida to Canada. He made many trips to make additions to his garden. Numerous trees figuring in the garden were given by his many friends. He procured boxwoods from Smyrna and Turkey, and a thorn tree from the Holy Land. George Washington was a frequent guest in this garden.

"Bartram died in 1777. After his death the garden became the possession of his children, but later it passed through different hands. In 1891 the garden was purchased by the city of Philadelphia. Much of the plant life in Fairmount Park had its origin in Bartram's garden. In recent years, factories and railroads have been built near the garden, thus robbing it of some of its beauty. One visiting the garden will marvel at the work done by John Bartram."

Mrs. Russell Gilbert, president of the Council, and a member of Lingochock Club, sang three vocal numbers.

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT

"Distributed by McNaught Syndicate, Inc."

The Country Turns

Washington, May 18. SO far as this country is concerned the most striking effect of the terrific developments abroad is in the changed atmosphere here. Even after Hitler invaded Denmark and conquered Norway a good many people seemed disposed to accept the theory that this is not our war, that we have no stake in it and our only concern should be to keep out of it.

—O—

BUT it is different now. What is happening in Holland, Belgium and France has switched sentiment very greatly. The extreme isolationists are in retreat and the country as a whole is behind the President's new defense program. There is no longer any pretense that the Allied cause is not our cause. There is now general recognition that it is merely enlightened selfishness to help the Allies in every way "short of war." What was needed to make us face the realities was a prospect of Nazi success. It has been ironic justice that certain aspiring candidates for the Presidency who thought the trend was one way and rushed in that direction should find now that the country has turned on them.

—O—

OBVIOUSLY, there will be slight opposition to making the "more than a billion-dollar appropriation for which Mr. Roosevelt asks. It, of course, is pretty bad that the reckless waste of the past eight years has so weakened Federal finances that they are in poor condition to stand this additional strain. It is deplorable, too, that our army and navy should be in so inadequate a state, despite the seven billions appropriated since 1934 and despite Mr. Roosevelt's insistence that the things said to that effect by men who ought to know are not true. But this is an emergency and neither these things nor the question of how the billion is to be raised without breaking the national credit should stand in the way of affirmative

Woman Sets Fire To Police Department Bedding

A Trenton woman attempted to make things hot for the Bristol police early Saturday evening when she, according to the police, deliberately set fire to the bedding in the detention room of the Municipal Building here.

Today Mrs. Johanna Moore, 37, N. Clinton avenue, Trenton, N. J., was charged with malicious mischief and Chief Jones asked Justice of Peace Edward Lynn to hold her for court. Judge Lynn complied with the request.

Mrs. Moore fell into the hands of the police late Saturday afternoon, when the officers took her into custody because they said she was "intoxicated." Previous to that she had been along the Highway near Mill street, where it was said she was making herself objectionable.

After being slated Mrs. Moore was placed in the detention room and a short while after Chief Jones smelled smoke. He went to investigate and he found the mattress, sheet and pillow of the bed in the detention room ablaze. The police say that Mrs. Moore deliberately set fire to the bedding and it is for this reason that they have charged her with malicious mischief.

Little Bristol Tot Goes Sightseeing in Big City

A Bristol mother had a hectic shopping tour in Trenton Saturday afternoon when her five-year-old offspring wandered off to see the sights of the city. Little Franklin J. West, 717 Wood street, was later found tied out as he sat in a doorway on East Hanover street and he was just a bit frightened when he began to realize that mother was missing. But he got a ride in a red radio police car and was returned to his mother by a man wearing a lot of buttons on his coat.

Mrs. Glenn West went shopping in a South Broad street department store in Trenton. About three o'clock she missed her little son, whom she had been watching every minute of the afternoon and his absence was noticed almost immediately but he had gone.

The frantic mother telephoned police headquarters to see if they had found any trace of the youngster. Lieutenant Mullen said they had not, but promised to send several officers to search for him. A half-hour later he was found in a doorway on East Hanover street, completely tired and just a little bit frightened by the world hurrying by. Patrolman Nicholas Lichtfuss carried him in a police radio car to where his mother was waiting, on the verge of collapse. She was too overjoyed at seeing her son again to scold him for wandering away.

SECRET WEAPON

Wild rumors have followed the easy capture of the powerful Belgian fort at Eben Emael by German forces near Liege. According to dispatches, there is something very mysterious in the surrender of 1,000 soldiers with little show of resistance; and immediately military experts get busy inventing a reason. The answer is the "secret weapon" of which Hitler has been boasting.

Even if this is only imagination, the German high command is encouraging the idea. Guesses run all the way from a super-bomb or an irresistible flame-thrower to a magic gas that temporarily attacks the nerves and leaves its victims at the mercy of the invaders. About the only thing ruled out is a pocket submarine.

Excitement was caused during the World War by reports of an invisible "death ray" which could kill at long distance. Yet in all the ensuing years the best scientists have been able to do is kill insects and small animals a few feet away.

It is not easy, however, to explain away the Eben Emael capitulation. German sources say, whether for propaganda can only be conjectured, that a Lieutenant Witzig landed with a small air force and by use of the mysterious weapon opened the way in no time for the attacking columns.

Fantastic as it sounds, the possibility that Hitler really has a device which causes resistance to crumble cannot be dismissed. If it is true, then its nature will be discovered and some effective defense developed. Gases can be met by new types of gas mask. New explosives capable of wrecking whole blocks are not a German monopoly.

The danger is that before an answer can be found for the "secret weapon," if there is such a thing, Hitler will have gained his immediate objectives. The fact that he is reported to have released it now indicates how vital he believes the drive through the low countries is.

"TELEVISED" CONVENTIONS

Announcement that the Republican National Convention at Philadelphia will be "televised"—to use the current barbarism—opens fascinating possibilities. According to Chairman John D. M. Hamilton, the combined resources of the National Broadcasting Company and the Philco Radio and Television Corporation will bring convention scenes to residents of an area within a 90-mile radius who have television receiving sets.

Although this service is in its infancy, being limited to short distances until relaying stations are established, the prospect that at some future time intimate views of political conventions will be "televised" recalls the influence of radio on oratory. Realization that the sound of his voice was carried to millions of homes put a brake on the blather-skite tendencies of many a speaker. Television may well curb certain modes of behavior not uncommon on convention floors and rostrums.

But television, like radio, will not eliminate the demagogue. It will merely compel him to effect refinements in his style.

Canadian authorities are hiking the tax on cigarettes so that soon a package of twenty will retail for twenty-five cents, with the smokers saying they will quit smoking before they will pay it. Anybody would but an American.

ECHOES OF THE PAST

THE STORY THE TEA-LEAVES TOLD

By Doron Green

(This story is a combination of truth and fiction. Such a robber once lived in Bristol and his exposure caused a great deal of excitement. His home was found to be filled with stolen articles.)

In a cozy, little home on Radcliffe street, Bristol, a spirited argument is taking place between husband and wife. Let us listen in on the conversation.

The wife is talking: "John, you are a big fool; you cannot continue as you have without being caught, and exposure means humiliation and shame, not only to you, but to me as well. The townspeople look upon you as an honest, upright citizen. You are prominent in the work of the church and Sunday school. Little do your friends realize the double life you are leading. What a disgrace when they find that you are a common thief and that hidden beneath the rafters and under the floors can be found stolen goods. Stolen from friends and neighbors who have trusted you and still have confidence in you."

"Won't you stop, John, before it is too late?"

The husband remained quiescent, and seeing that her appeal to his better manhood was in vain, the wife left the room.

For several years many robberies had been committed in Bristol and, although High Constable John Worrell and the Police Committee of Borough Council had united in their efforts to run down the robber, no clues could be found. The fact that the robberies were always timed when the constable had relinquished his efforts and sent his special officers home for the night, seemed, seemed substantial proof that the culprit was someone in close touch with the efforts of the police.

At last the robberies occurred so often that High Constable Worrell swore in a number of special officers to act as a posse, and these men he stationed at different points in the town, and awaited developments. Let us look in again at the home of John —. His wife, who is very angry, is talking: "You think you are a smart Aleck joining the posse and being sworn in by Constable Worrell. Can't you see that the law is closing in on you? You can't resist the temptation to steal in the district in which you are stationed and then the suspicion will rest upon you. Once suspicion is aroused it spreads rapidly and cares nothing for character or reputation. Once more I appeal to you, John, to give up this double life you are leading before it is too late and you are engulfed by shame, remorse and disgrace."

John, without replying, arose and went out the door.

In a few nights his wife's prophecy came true and several robberies occurred in the district where John had been appointed. Constable Worrell changed the location of his men and a few nights afterward, robberies took place in the district where John had been sent. At last suspicion was directed toward him, but it was hard for Constable Worrell to believe that one of his best friends, and one who stood so high in the community, could be a common thief.

The young man who held the position of Clerk of Borough Council was in the dry-goods and grocery business in the third ward, and several times his store had been robbed. One night he was seen crossing the lot toward the flood-gates east of Bath street above Buckley street. After crossing the flood-gates he continued his way, following the shore of the Mill Pond, until he came to a single house among the many houses that had been erected in that neighborhood. Let us enter with him and observe what happens. An elderly colored woman was sitting in a chair with a table before her on which rested a tea cup. The Borough clerk explained to her that a number of robberies had been committed within the borough during the past year and, although every effort had been made to apprehend the culprit, nothing had been accomplished. Could she do anything to help, he asked.

At first the colored lady said nothing, but busied herself with the tea leaves within the cup. After stirring them for some time, she suddenly stopped and began to talk, but not to anyone in particular:

"I see a tall man with an honest face, one who would pass for a Christian gentleman. He resides in a house on Radcliffe near — street." Then she paused.

"This man apparently is leading a double life. I see him breaking into a house under cover of darkness. His home is filled with stolen articles, and his wife is frantic lest he shall be discovered." Once more she paused.

"I see the posse which has been organized, and he is among them. The position of the leaves indicate that if the High Constable will watch this man surprising results will be achieved."

The Borough Clerk returned to his home very much disturbed. He did not want to believe the fortune-teller but her description of the thief and the place of his residence were so startling that he was forced to admit that the interview had impressed him deeply. Hunting up Constable Worrell, the next morning, he informed him what the fortune-teller had said. Together they agreed to set a trap for the robber. If it worked, all would be well, and if it failed, no one would know about it.

Accordingly, a few nights after the interview with the fortune-teller, when the posse had been assigned to their respective places, the Constable and Clerk quietly made their way to the district where the suspected robber had been appointed. From a secluded place they watched developments. About one o'clock, they noticed a man entering a yard back of Dorance street. Stealing quietly up the alley, they saw him pry open a shutter and enter the house. Shortly he came out, using a tablecloth for a bag which was filled with stolen goods. As the robber came out of the yard into the alley, Constable Worrell and the Borough Clerk grabbed him by the shoulders.

Seeing that resistance was useless and that he had been caught red-handed, the thief, who was none other than the respected gentleman who resided on Radcliffe street, confessed that it was he who had been committing the robberies and that he was ready to pay the penalty for his misdoings.

The next morning the town was startled by the news. Some citizens were severe in their denunciation, while others were inclined to be merciful. Constable Worrell was terribly upset as the prisoner was his personal friend. As the days passed the prisoner's wife made restitution wherever possible. At last, upon the prisoner's promise to leave town promptly, he was released.

In time the excitement quieted down but the Borough Clerk and Constable Worrell could never forget the accurate information imparted by the fortune-teller. Could she have had any knowledge of the finger of suspicion pointing to a certain individual and enlarged upon it? Or were her conclusions simply a coincidence? Surely no sensible man would want to believe that a few tea leaves in the bottom of a tea cup would, by their position, accurately reveal the culprit.

action. The first thing is to give the money.

HOWEVER, there is nothing in the situation that excuses either personal or political hysteria. Some of the suggestions that have been put forth within the last two days at least border on that state. They indicate a degree of panic not justified by the facts. Certainly acquiescence in the Roosevelt request for a billion-dollar appropriation should not carry with it abandonment of the right either to criticize or question. We are not at war. Everybody hopes we will not have to go to war, and there is certainly no necessity and less sense in becoming, in effect, a totalitarian state in order to prepare for war.

ON the contrary, the very fact that under the present Executive so many billions have been wasted is the soundest of reasons for the opposition to retain its sense of balance and not be swept off its feet by clamor. For example, it would seem in the national interest to insist that the spending of this money is more important than appropriating it. If it is to be effectively spent, both American industry and the governmental departments concerned have got to be relieved of some of the respective New Deal legislation which cramps production and interferes with obtaining supplies.

IF it is to be effectively spent some new and competent non-partisan agency, able and willing to get the facts, ought to be put in charge. The great need is to lift this whole business of preparedness above the level of party or factional politics. It needs to be taken out of the realm where the palace politicians can gloat over what the war and the defense billions mean for the success of their third-term plans—which is what they are now doing. Of course, Mr. Roosevelt could accomplish that at any moment in a single statement. And it would put him on a pinnacle such as no President ever occupied before, and such as he can occupy in no other way.

BUT, if his friends are to be believed, there is slight chance of his making the "great renunciation" now. Certainly they are violently opposed to it. They are willing enough that he should invite a Republican like Col. Frank Knox into the Cabinet and set up a non-partisan commission to make a survey, recommend special taxes or spend the money. But, renounce a third term, no! With it now practically in his grasp, that, they point out, would be foolish.

PERHAPS before this is printed the President will have made some move toward a nonpartisan setup and the creation of some agency competent to co-ordinate industry and get results from the expenditures. His conference with Colonel Knox on Thursday and his luncheon with Mr. B. M. Baruch on Saturday indicate a move in these directions. But there is nothing to indicate a move in the other direction. On the contrary, while the whole program is with the view of protecting ourselves from the threat of a dictator over there, we are invited to subscribe to the theory of the indispensable man over here. It is illogical, undesirable and not in the national interest.

"TITAN TOWER" by JAMES G. CHESNUTT

Story to Date

Thrust into each other's acquaintance as they aid a man pinned in elevator machinery of new skyscraper, Titan Tower, Dr. Bill Blaine and Nurse Linda Morton see hints of mutual attraction. Linda can hardly conceal her warm, sudden affection for the handsome young doctor. In fact, she lapses into happy daze of romance after Dr. Blaine praises her work. Later, however, she vividly recalls her joyful life with Mike Morton, aviator, until she told him she was to have a child. Try as he might, Mike could not conceal his displeasure.

CHAPTER FIVE

Later, as each day took them further and further apart, Mike tried increasingly hard to hide his real feelings. Linda thought that if he hadn't tried so obviously to be a good sport she could have forgiven him more easily.

But if Linda's love for Mike was to die, it was that first shock, that emotional trauma, which rendered that love hopelessly crippled, never to recover as long as Mike lived.

Mike Morton, the perfect lover, was woefully miscast as Mike Morton, prospective papa. He just didn't click in the part.

It was funny about "Junior." They had been very grown up and parentally concerned about their "child," when that offspring was a building of steel and stone and not their own flesh and blood.

"Junior," of course, was what they called Titan Tower. She and Mike had watched its birth, had watched it grow and develop and mature; had wondered about the life which was to go on within the confines of its towering walls. They had known Titan Tower before it had that name. From their birds'-eye point of vantage in the air, as Trip 9 flew over the site daily, they had watched it grow from debris of razed old buildings, to a huge excavation, through its skeleton stages to become a towering thing of beauty and utility. And they had been proud of it.

"Junior looks very well today," Mike used to comment when they set down at Portland. "Much taller and filling out rapidly."

Mike was proud of that baby, all right—a mighty infant cradled in concrete. But this was different.

It was strange, too, Linda thought, that it was in this same building that she first met Janice Marberry, her dearest friend. And Mike Morton was indirectly the cause of that meeting. The day when Linda walked through the massive, severely beautiful portals of Titan Tower, was whisked up to the nineteenth floor and opened the insurance company door to see Janice's sweet, sympathetic face with a friendly greeting almost voiced in her smile, was the first time that Linda had ever set foot in the building.

She and Mike had never been there together. They were too busy having a gay, carefree time—Mike's way.

And then, suddenly one thick foggy night, much like the night that had sat by the fire and had seen their lives fall apart, it was too late.

The swirling steam from the hot cup of tea, which Mrs. Blauer had forced into Linda's listless hand, eddied upward like that same fog.

And, through it, Linda seemed to see not the face of Mike Morton, who had crushed love, although trying not to, but that of a young doctor who had stirred its ashes.

Bill Blaine's work, like Mike's, took him to the skies. And "Junior" had introduced them. She lapsed into a fitful sleep and dreamt she ing," Linda explained. "Whew!" she exclaimed, glancing at the watch on her wrist. "Mother has to get going if we're going to have any dinner. You run along now and get Depey and wash his face and yours, to be ready for dinner."

Mrs. Blauer, a genuine, good-hearted woman, whose own brood was grown and gone from home, lavished her great store of motherly love on Linda and her boy.

After Mrs. Blauer had gone home,

"Mother," Mickey asked sternly, "why did you fight Mrs. Blauer?"

was being pushed into a fog-filled pit. . . .

If Linda had to die that way, she would die fighting. Somebody with powerful, prehensile hands was pushing, tugging, dragging her from her perch on a beam, high above a fog-filled pit. Linda fought with every ounce of strength, fought desperately to fend off a horrible fate.

She was falling, falling. . . . falling, when a firm, strong hand reached out and caught her, pulled her to breathless safety. . . .

Linda opened her eyes to look into Mrs. Blauer's pleasant motherly face, framed in neatly combed gray hair; to see Mrs. Blauer's capable hand cupped under Linda's elbow and to hear the friendly neighbor say:

"Good heavens, child! What did you think was happening? Person would think I was trying to kill you instead of wake you up."

Linda smiled wanly and looked down to Mrs. Blauer's side, where Mickey, solemn and staring, stood.

"Mother," he asked sternly, "why did you fight Mrs. Blauer? You hit her."

"Mother had a bad dream, darl-

Eighty Gather To Welcome Couple After Long Trip

A "welcome home" party was tendered to Mr. and Mrs. John D. Weik, Jefferson avenue, on Saturday evening, by members of the Social Circle, in First Baptist Church. Mr. and Mrs. Weik recently returned from a four months' stay in Tucson, Arizona.

Eighty were assembled as Mr. and Mrs. Weik entered the room. On Mrs. Weik's head was a large straw, Mexican hat, three feet in diameter, and draped about her was a colorful Mexican scarf. Mr. Weik wore a felt "10-gallon" hat, and a yellow silk scarf of the cowboys.

Mrs. Fred Gould, who acted as president of the Circle in Mrs. Weik's absence, gave a welcoming speech, and turned the program over to Gilbert Lovett. After prayer by the pastor, the Rev. Howard L. Zepp, the group sang. A piano duet was given by Miss Rae Vandegrift and Mrs. Howard L. Zepp.

Mr. Lovett then called upon Mrs. Weik to tell of the flowers of Tucson, which proved very interesting.

Mr. Weik gave a graphic account of the homes in Tucson; and Mr. Weik's uncle, Julian McLaughlin, told of the growth of Tucson since he became a resident there 27 years ago. Mr. McLaughlin is a former Bristolian.

An original poem telling of pleasure over the return of the Weiks was read by Mr. Lovett. Selections by Mr. Lovett on the musical saw and the guitar, were accompanied by pianist, Miss Winifred Tracy.

To Mrs. Weik a bouquet of flowers was presented by Mrs. Gould on behalf of the Circle.

After group singing, refreshments of ice cream and home-made cake were served.

ON THE SCREENS

GRAND THEATRE

The team of Clark Gable and Joan Crawford, which co-starred with marked success five times before, rises to new heights by reason of two of the season's most memorable performances in "Strange Cargo," which opened Sunday at the Grand Theatre.

As convict Verne Andre, desperado who escapes a South American penal colony, Gable reasserts his superiority as an actor as well as a personality, for his conception of the role carries all the true shading of an understanding artist. As the cynical cafe entertainer, Julie, who is finally willing to sacrifice herself because she could not accomplish the reform she longed for in Verne's character, Joan Crawford re-establishes the standing as a dramatic actress which was conceded her for her work in "The Women."

BRISTOL THEATRE

Scintillating comedy and high intrigue vie for the spotlight, against the romantic background of little known South Africa, in "Adventures in Diamonds," which opened last night at the Bristol Theatre, with George Brent and Isa Miranda co-starring.

LANDRETH SEEDS WIN TWO GAMES DURING WEEK-END

"Farmers" Defeat Bacharach Giants at Landreth Park By Score of 12 to 1

WIN AT LANCASTER

Locals Victorious Over All-Lancaster Nine at Lancaster By Score of 8 to 4

Landreth Seeds baseball team won two games over the week-end, winning on Saturday over the Bacharach Giants at Landreth Ball Park 12-1 and yesterday at Lancaster 8 to 4 in ten innings.

Al Carey held the Giants to seven scattered hits in pitching the Seeds to victory on Saturday and with perfect support would have scored a shut-out. Debokey's error on Jenkins and Child's two base hit in the third inning allowed the run.

The "Farmers" batted Sunket the visitors starting pitcher out of the box after 4-2-3 innings and Barber who replaced him was treated just as bad. The home team made seventeen hits. Liberatore, Lodge and Debokey each making three.

Yesterday at Lancaster the Seeds won a hair-raising ten inning battle from the All-Lancaster team 8-4.

With the score a tie at 4-4 in the final inning and two out Johnnie Miksis reached first when Noble fumbled his hot smash. Claude Lodge counted him with a home run drive along the right field line, David's base on balls and Rossi's homer to the right field seats gave the Farmers a four run lead.

For seven innings the game was an interesting mound duel between Paul Billett the Lebanon Valley College star on the mound for the home team and Lonnie Heister, each team having scored two runs. Billett allowing seven hits and Heister five.

Hits by Liberatore, Miksis and David along with an outfield fly by Lodge gave the Farmers a two run advantage in the eighth inning.

The home team rallied with two runs in the ninth, tying the score. Leaby singled with one out and Noble was safe on David's error, after Miller flied out Baxter hit a low line drive which Rockhill failed to hold and two runners counted. Billett followed with a two base drive to left field, but fast fielding by Miksis who threw to Rossi nailed Baxter at the plate with what would have been the winning tally.

The batting of David with three hits and a one handed catch by W. Miller in right field which robbed Lodge of a sure homer were the feature.

Thursday night the Landreth team will play the Phila. Clowns in the opening twilight game and Sunday, Penn. A. C. will be the attraction at Landreth Ball Park.

TEXACO TO PLAY KING A. C.

With two victories under the belt, the Voltz-Texaco team will encounter stiff opposition tonight from the Morrisville team as it clashes with the King A. C. team in a Bristol Suburban League contest. King has won its only game played. It is most likely that Schickleton will do the twirling for the Texas boys with Magzillo doing the receiving. Vendor and Siltex will be the King battery. Tomorrow night in the Suburban circuit, games will be played at Croydon, Tullytown, Rohm and Haas and Edgely fields.

NEW CHAMP By Jack Sords

FIFTH WARD FINDS VISITORS TOO STRONG

The Fifth Ward Sporting Club softball team, champions of the Bristol Community League, found the opposition of the Lamberton A. A. team, of Trenton, too strong on Grundy's field yesterday and bowed to the visitors, 9-7, in a 10-inning game.

Two hits and a costly error gave the Jerseyites the game, although the Fifth Warders had a chance to deadlock it in their half when they placed runners on first and third with one out but could not advance them.

Danny DiMidio put the Warders in the game in the third by tripling with the bases loaded. The Trenton team scored five times in their part of the frames thanks to a long double to left field by Cebulski with the sacks filled. Melidino and Quindio did the hurling for the Bristol team while the visiting team's winner was Cebulski. Score by innings:

Lamberton	2	0	5	0	0	0	0	2	9

BRISTOL A. A. VICTORS OVER LANSDOWNE

Two runs in the eighth inning gave Johnny Mulholland's Bristol A. A. team a hard-earned victory over the Lansdowne Giants yesterday afternoon on the latter's field in Darby. Final score was Bristol, 4; Lansdowne, 2.

A two-bagger from the bat of Lloyd McGinley with the sacks loaded gave the A. A. their third straight win. Hughes had opened the inning with a hit and was sacrificed by Harrison. Stallone got a single and Palowez drew a pass to populate the sacks. Then came Lloyd's ramming double along the left field foul line.

Stan Dick pitched good ball for the A's giving the colored boys but five hits and keeping them well scattered. Willie Bacon of the Giants caught hold of a Dick pitch in the second and slammed it against the left field fence, a drive of 340 feet. He received a triple on the blow.

Stallone, Dick and McGinley with a single and double each led the Bristol team at bat. Stallone reached every time he stepped to the plate.

Burgess Anderson, addressing the committee, writes as follows: "Gentlemen:

CLIFF SMITH, Promotor

"It is with pleasure and a feeling of gratification that I respond to your letter soliciting my endorsement for the planned celebration to be held here on July 4th, Independence Day.

"The celebration which your committee staged here last year was a decided success and a credit to those who planned it and worked for it. The thousands who attended the morning and evening programs, heard the inspiring addresses, sang with enthusiasm the patriotic selections, and viewed with pleasure the fine pyrotechnic display, were free in their expressions of approval and satisfaction.

"Such an occasion as your committee plans, stimulates patriotism among our citizenship, kindles the fires of love and devotion to one's country; and impresses upon those who are living in this land of freedom, a sense of responsibility and devotion to those ideals upon which this great land was founded.

"May this July 4th and other Independence Day celebrations inspire us to protect our country from those of insidious mind and activities, who would destroy that which our forefathers built.

"There is only one America—let us each do OUR part to preserve it FOREVER.

"I trust that your celebration will be a glorious success, and if I can be of further service, advise me.

"Respectfully,
(Signed) CLIFFORD L. ANDERSON, Burgess.

They certainly helped me out of that jam, although I was to blame. Of course, I wouldn't expect them to meet such unfair demands all the time! But The Bristol Printing Company just has a knack for turning out good printing quickly."
